MyShake App Updates

MyShake, an earthquake early warning system app has launched a new enhancement called HomeBase. This allows users to set a default location where they can receive earthquake early warning alerts, even if location services are temporarily down or turned off. This increases the app's ability to send timely alerts so that those affected by an earthquake can receive a warning for a location of their choosing and be prepared for shaking. Other new features on the app include the ability to set an audible tone prior to the verbal warning; and the addition of tsunami safety information. MyShake leverages the technology of the federal ShakeAlert earthquake early warning system to deliver early warning of earthquakes before shaking starts. These alerts are already available to all mobile phones through the Wireless Emergency Alert (WEA) system and/or through a built-in-earthquake alerting system on the Android Operating System. The MyShake app provides a third option that may be a faster way for users to get an earthquake alert on their phones than the WEA system.
